Independent and privately owned since 1984

RENEW RESTORE REVIVE

In the early 1980s Michael Struebel was planning on a life as a landscape gardener. That all changed the day his elder brother Klaus abandoned his broken down car, tossed the vehicle keys to Michael accompanied by the challenge 'if you can repair it, you can keep it'. Michael duly rose to the challenge and won the car.

Thirty-two years on and Michael still rises to every mechanical challenge the Saab world presents; often to the despair of his valiant team of four Master Saab Technicians (not musketeers) who between them have clocked-up over 150 years of Saab knowledge and experience.

Michael's mechanical defeats can be counted on one hand.

Of German origin, Michael has always been highly influenced and inspired by his father, Heinz, an engineer, whose international career involved creating, designing and manufacturing components. His exceptional eye for detail combined with outstanding standards and skills reflected the high standards associated with German Engineering.

Michael follows his father's example, seeking to always exceed customer expectations and maintain Two Stroke to Turbo's unrivalled reputation for quality, reliability and value.

Throughout his career, Michael has trained and advised numerous Saab engineers. Some now run similar businesses in the UK and Europe and continue to call him to obtain advice on how to solve a problematic Saab issue.

For Michael possesses the incredible ability commonly associated with that of a surgeon; visualising and understanding the task mechanics involved before performing the actual operation. In his mind's eye he can decipher and dismantle an engine and its components from any Saab model.

Michael has featured, as a Saab expert, on numerous occasions on TV, ('For the Love of Cars', 'Top Gear'), in multiple magazines and reputable newspapers. (It was his dad's Saab 900 Convertible that was put into the freezer and subsequently raced around Millbrook test ground).

Two Stroke to Turbo Ltd are also specialist suppliers of Saab parts in Britain and abroad. Due to a departmental restructure, all components (tried and tested to the highest standards) are currently on offer for sale at a discounted price – a bargain too good to miss.

Visit the company's exclusive eBay store (listed with outstanding feedback from previous satisfied customers) or give them a call to receive expert technical advice and latest stock availability.

The well-stocked in-house parts department also ensures that components are readily available for the service workshop, dramatically speeding up repair times to get your Saab back on the road quickly and guaranteeing economical and viable repairs.

In 2014 Michael, together with his life-partner Alison, (an accomplished landscape gardener and designer, known to utilise abandoned cars in her garden design and planting schemes) moved to new, improved modern premises where Michael and his experienced team maintain their ethos of high quality work, providing exceptional customer service and satisfaction whilst delivering Saab automotive excellence at fiercely competitive, independent prices.

Two Stroke to Turbo cover all aspects of Saab care from routine servicing and mechanical work to perfectly finished car body repairs and restorations. Courtesy vehicles, or alternatively a delivery/collection service, are provided as required, minimising customer inconvenience whilst cars are in their care.

Contact them today to discuss your Saab project, however big or small, and enter the world of satisfied and loyal customers where Saab expertise meets standards that excel.
